Grasp the yoke

As an aviation management student at Lynn, you're in for a thrilling experience. From airport "field trips" to simulations and even cockpit training, a business/aviation education at Lynn is all hands-on, all the time.

Your studies will focus on the core business structure of the aviation industry. You'll learn to manage and maintain operations, while also keeping an eye on the future of the business. You'll become familiar with the finances, scheduling and regulations that affect the decision-making process for an aeronautics professional.

All aviation students at Lynn have the time and opportunity to earn pilot licenses and ratings...and MBA students even enjoy an accelerated program that enables them to finish their degree in as little as one year.

No matter which degree you earn, the business-centered aviation management programs at Lynn will put you ahead of the pack.

Map your route

Your new business degree will make it easy to find a long-lasting career that affects the lives of many. And by focusing on aviation management, you'll hold a special qualification that many of your peers won't.

A bachelor's degree from Lynn will enable you to qualify for specialist, coordinator or even manager-level roles, while a graduate degree will meet requirements for director-level positions in areas such as:

- airport management
- air traffic control
- aviation-based marketing
- commercial transportation industry

Hit new heights

Our aviation management alumni have impressive internship opportunities while studying at Lynn, which leads them to continued success in their careers. Take a look at the companies our aviation management alumni have gained employment with:
